PICCOLOMINI EATS A CORN. DODGER, &c. While Piccolomini was at the Biddle House, in this city, a characteristic incident occurred, which was quite the delight of the numerous admirers of the little princess, and which showed, to a charming degree, the peculiar love of admiration and popularity which she unmistakably possesses. There had been lodging at the same hotel for a few days, a genuine specimen of the untam
19 feet; thence westwardly, parallel with Cameron

18 feet, 80 feet, to a ten feet alley; thence with said of Wolverine-one of the rough, hearty, backwoods style of old fellows, bluff and outspoken, and a great contemner of city airs Having a pocket-full of money, he was enjoying himself on the fat of the land. Having satiated on the firstclass fare of the house before his money had that suggested itself to his roving fancy was the familiar corn-dodger which had been the tos dissatisfaction, was obliged to inform him that he had not a cook in the house who could make a corn-dodger, adding, also, that there probably was not one in the city who ever heard of such a thing. Not to be daunted, however, our hero made a straight wake for an eating-house, and, by dint of energetic management, succeeded in getting one made, having stood over the cook and superintended the whole operation. He was in his glory that night as he was seated at the table with his big corn-dodger before him, and all the company wondering what on earth it was. Directly opposite, it happened that Piccolomini was placed, and no eyes were wider spread than the brown orbs which illuminated the childish face of the petite Siennese. The little minx looked at the corn-dodger, which was as big as a half bushel, and then gazed at her male companion in the prettiest of all puzzlements.— Then she laughed a little, and leaned forward so as to look in the face of the old fellow, giving him a glance full of the most radiant diablerie that ever mortal saw in woman's eye. He was quite fascinated, but mistook the cause. He honestly thought that Piccolimini wanted some of his corndodger, and, seizing his knife with a glowing countenance and pleased expression, be "Have a piece, Miss?"

A puzzled expression overspread the pretty face opposite for a moment, but a sudden hight dawned upon it, followed by a merry high and such a clapping of hands. Then a succession of nods ensued, which signified assent to the delighted trader. He lost no time in carving out a huge piece, which he passed over on the point of his knife. It wasn't much of a bite for him, but the little have in great variety white and Colored Cheap prima donna could barely clasp it in both Straw, Neapolitan, Linen, Parmelia, Leghorn, hands, as she received it in high glee. She Florence Braid, English Straw, Blond, Tissue looked at it with a delightful bewilderment for a moment, and then, with a rueful face at the predicament in which she had got hersely, the Millinery line. The scene created an uproar, and there was no end of hilarity and good humor, in which none more heartily participated than the Piccolomini .- Detroit

MUSK IN A BACKWOODS TAVERN.

A short time since a gentleman and lady were travelling in Michigan, and baving missed the stage had to take a private conveyance from the town of Scuderi to Thomastown .-The lady had with her a beautiful little lap dog, which she carried on her lap on an embroidered mat. During the ride the husband discovered he had no handkerchief, when the lady lent him hers, which was fashionably seented with musk. About half way betwen the two towns the carriage broke down. in the midst of a hard rain, and they were in the midst of a hard rain, and they were obliged to take refuge in the half way house a "one horse" log tavern, consisting of two one door from Washington street. rooms a bar room and lodging room. The lady laid her lap dog on its mat before the tire, and herself and husband took seats. In a short time the gentleman had occasion to it lying on his knees, when he got through with it. In a few moments the landlord open ed the door, put his head in, looked around, went out, came in, gazed at the dog-his nostrils all the while upturned in disgust .-He finally appeared satisfied, went to the outside door, opened it, and came back with a bound, seized the lap dog by the tail and burled him howling through the open door, full ten rods into the forest. The wife fainted, the husband arose to his feet in a terrible rage, and wanted to know what he did that That's my dog," continued he, furious-

A table inserted in a paper in the Assurance Magazine exhibits results of a rather startling character. In the first two quinquenial periods-20-25 and 25-30-the probability of a widower marrying in a year is three times as great as that of a bachelor; at 30 it is nearly four times as great; from 30 to io it is five times as great; and it increases. until at 60 the chance of a widower marrying in a year is 11 times as great as that of a bachelor. It is curious to remark, from this table, how confirmed either class becomes in its condition of life; how little likely, after a few years, is a bachelor to break through his settled habits and solitary condition; and on the other hand, how readily in proportion thes a husband contract a second marriage | beautiful article. Call and examine them at who has been deprived prematurely of his first partner. After the age of 30, the probabilityof a bachelor marrying in a year diminihess in a most rapid ratio. The probability at 35 is not much more than half that at 30, and nearly the same proportion exists between each quinquenial period afterwards.
